Content:

This seminar provides both a technical and practical perspective on the relevance and application of the principles of Environmentally Sustainable Development (ESD). An expert panel with a broad range of experiences will provide a comprehensive look at how planners may achieve ESD outcomes. Russell Kennedy will then provide a practical illustration of how the principles apply.

Presenters:

Stephen Ingrouille - Principal, Going Solar

Since 1978, Going Solar have grown to become Victoria's leading Renewable Energy and Sustainable Living Specialists through retail, wholesale, projects, environmental and consulting. Steve not only runs a successful enterprise consulting for ESD but holds a passion for all aspects of the built environment including planning, urban design and particularly transport planning.

Craig Czarny, FPIA CPP - Director, Hansen Partnership

Craig is an Urban Designer and Landscape Architect with over 20 years experience in local and international practice. His involvement in ESD initiatives stems back to his early work in Latin America and South East Asia, where traditional design and building practices support natural systems and conservation. Today, his interest lies in translation of these ideas into contemporary city design and place making.

Brenda Kingston - Associate, Built Ecology

With both a building services engineering and environmental background, Brenda has been involved in leading and delivering integrated sustainable design solutions in the built environment for over ten years. In her current role, Brenda delivers concepts for passive building performance, energy efficient services design, and solutions with a strong emphasis on human comfort and wellness. Significant recent projects include the Olivia Newton-John Cancer and Wellness Centre, and the recently completed Faculty of Economics & Commerce building for the University of Melbourne.

David Vorchheimer, MPIA CPP - Senior Associate - Government, Planning and Environment, Russell Kennedy

David is the President of the Victorian Division of the Planning Institute. In addition to his legal qualifications, he is a qualified planner with extensive 'hands on' experience working in local government and the planning industry, including most recently as Manager Planning and Building at a large metropolitan Council. David offers a legalistic interpretation to applying ESD principles in planning policy development, formulation and implementation.
